THE RISE OF CAFÉ CULTURE IN BRITAIN

A. Stereotypes might suggest that British people only drink strong tea from fine china cups, though a quick walk along a typical British high street will prove that Brits are now a nation of coffee addicts. Commuters order espressos at station platforms to treat exhaustion, and drink soup-bowl-sized lattes at countless coffee shops. Over the past 25 years, numerous chains have gradually appeared on every corner of the high street. Coffee shops serving beans from around the world have popped up, and today the UK is in the midst of what is known as the third wave coffee movement.

B. Espresso coffee, which was introduced in the 1950s, tasted much better than instant coffee sold in supermarkets. The 1990s were a breakthrough. At that time, the softly furnished coffee shops serving a variety of espresso-based drinks started to appear. They were a world away from the greasy-spoon snack bars or gloomy cafés British people had been accustomed to. The new coffee shops actually encouraged customers to take a seat in comfortable surroundings and to come back again.

- C. The popularity of café culture was further boosted in the digital age because mobile phones, laptops, and later tablets, freed some office workers from their desks. As the economic recession hit and many high-street retail shops closed down, cafés filled the gap. By installing Wi-Fi, cafés established themselves as an alternative place to work and socialize. This was combined with a demand for breakfasts on the go from commuters and the emergence of foodie culture.
- D. Experts agree that nowadays Britain has one of the most vibrant and innovative coffee cultures in the world. The UK's "coffee business" may be booming precisely because it wasn't always a country where a lot of coffee was traditionally drunk, unlike in Italy, the USA, Germany or Finland, so there wasn't a traditional coffee culture to overcome. Indeed, the coffee scene is a melting pot of influences. The latest trend is pour-over drinks, in particular the Flat White which has conquered the UK market.

FINDING THE PAST

A window on Boston's past has turned up in a rather unusual place: inside the head of a lion statue at the top of the Old State House. 2.1. _____ Once on the ground, it was transported to a laboratory where a fiber optic camera was used to inspect the interior of the statue's head. It was then that the time capsule, a copper box, was located. The next steps, according to Heather Leet, the Society's director of development, will be to open the statue carefully, remove the box, and examine its contents. After that, the statue will be restored and returned to its lofty home.

The discovery came as no surprise to members of the Bostonian Society, who have long been sure of the existence of the time capsule in the lion's head. 2.2. _____ It describes how the capsule was placed in the statue and details its contents, including newspaper clippings and photographs from the period, together with letters from politicians and other prominent Bostonians of the era. "We're really looking forward to seeing what those letters say," said Leet, adding that they could contain messages written to future generations.

The Old State House, which is among Boston's most popular tourist attractions, has a rich history. It was an important civic building in colonial times, and later became a focal point of the American Revolution. The Boston Massacre took place just outside the building in 1770. 2.3. _____ And after this momentous historic event, the building served as the seat of the Massachusetts government until the completion of a new State House in 1798.

The statues of a lion and a unicorn were first placed on the building in 1713. 2.4. _____ Prior to the American Revolution, this was appropriate because the building was the official seat of the British government of the Massachusetts Bay Colony. However, amid the subsequent patriotic fervor during the War of Independence, they were burned. 2.5. _____ Those soon rotted due to weather conditions, and in 1901 they were replaced again. The new ones were made of copper and steel and coated in gold and silver. They can be seen by all those visiting Boston today.

- A. A few years later the Declaration of Independence was read to Bostonians from its balcony.
- B. Their certainty was primarily based on a 1901 issue of The Boston Globe which contains a lengthy article about the time capsule.
- C. They were designed as a commemoration of that horrible event as the citizens of the city wanted to honour the victims.
- D. The Bostonian Society yesterday announced the discovery of a time capsule within the copper statue taken down from the roof for restoration.
- E. A century later, the Bostonian Society decided to put wooden replicas of the statues on the top of the building to restore its historical appearance.
- F. They were intended as symbols of the union between England and Scotland.

AN INTERVIEW AT RUNWAY

She did not stand up to greet me. Although she was not smiling, she did not appear particularly intimidating. She seemed rather gentle and somewhat shrunken behind her huge desk. She did not invite me to sit down, but I felt confident enough to claim one of the uncomfortable black chairs that was facing her. She was watching me intently, mentally noting my attempts at grace and propriety. She spoke first.

“What brings you to Runway, Andrea?” she asked in her upper-crust British accent, never taking her eyes away from mine.

“Well, I’ve been told you need an assistant,” I started, my voice a little shaky. When she nodded, my confidence increased slightly. “And now, after my meeting with Emily, I feel that I have a clear understanding of the kind of person you’re looking for, and I’m confident that I’d be perfect for the job,” I said. She looked amused for a moment.

It was at this point that I began to want the job desperately, in the way people want things which they consider unattainable. It might not be like getting into law school or having an essay published in a campus journal, but it was, in my mind, a real challenge – a challenge because I was an imposter, and not a very good one. I had known the moment I stepped out of the lift and into the office space of the Runway floor that I didn’t belong. My clothes and hair were all wrong, though more glaringly out of place was my attitude. I didn’t know anything about fashion and I didn’t care. At all. And therefore, I had to have this job. Besides, a million girls would die for such an opportunity.

I continued to answer her questions with a straightforwardness and confidence that surprised me. There wasn’t time to be intimidated. Then she inquired whether I spoke any foreign languages. When I told her I knew Hebrew, she paused and said icily, “Hebrew? I was hoping for French, or at least something more useful.” I almost apologized, but stopped myself.

“Unfortunately, I don’t speak a word of French, but I’m confident it won’t be a problem.”

“It says here that you studied at Brown University?”

“Yes, I was an English major, concentrating on creative writing. Writing has always been my passion.” So cheesy! I reprimanded myself. Did I really have to use the word “passion”?

“So, does your affinity for writing mean that you’re not particularly interested in fashion?”

“Of course not. I adore fashion,” I lied rather smoothly. “I’m looking forward to learning even more about it. I think it would be wonderful to write about fashion one day.”

Things progressed with the same relative ease until she asked her final question, “Which magazines do you read regularly?” I leaned forward eagerly and began to speak, “Well, I only subscribe to The New Yorker and Newsweek, but I regularly read The Buzz. Sometimes Time, but it’s dry as dust, and U.S. News, which is too conservative. As a guilty pleasure, I’ll skim Chic, and since I’ve just returned from my travels, I read all of the travel magazines...”

“And do you read Runway, Andrea?” she interrupted, looking at me more intently than before.

It had come so unexpectedly, that for the first time that day I was caught off-guard. I didn't lie or attempt to explain.

"No."

After ten seconds of stony silence, she called for Emily to escort me out.

TO INTERVIEW OR NOT TO INTERVIEW?

A friend of mine once had a curious experience at a job interview. Excited about the possible position, she arrived five minutes early and was immediately shown into the interview room by the receptionist. Following an amicable, easy-going discussion with a panel of interviewers, she was offered the job. Afterwards, one of the interviewers remarked how impressed she was that my friend had been so composed after showing up 25 minutes late for the interview. As it turned out, the start time my friend had been given by the company's receptionist was wrong by half an hour. My friend was so calm because she didn't know she had turned up late. She isn't the type of person who would remain cool if she knew she was late, so the misunderstanding turned out really well for her. Of course, the interviewers could have also concluded that her calmness was a sign of disrespect. Either way, they would have been wrong to draw conclusions about her future performance in her work based on her attitude at the interview. In this case, thankfully, the outcome was favourable to the applicant.

My friend's experience is merely an example of a much more widespread problem. Many employers now like to use free-form, unstructured interviews so as to "get to know" a job candidate. Such interviews are also increasingly popular with admissions officers at universities. But this style of interview can lead interviewers to form strong but unjustified impressions.

One solution is to develop an interview protocol based on a careful analysis of what is being looked for in the candidate. Interviews should be structured so that all candidates receive the same questions, a procedure which makes interviews more reliable and more predictive of job success. Employers should make sure to include a number of questions which test specific job-related skills.
