CENTRAL PARK AND ITS NEIGHBOURHOOD

4.1.
-------------	--

Central Park is an oasis of peace in the middle of busy New York City. But if you think that it's only a place for jogging and relaxing on the grass, you're wrong. In Central Park you'll find many sports facilities, performance areas, and cultural places, including an open-air cinema, the Metropolitan Museum of Art and the American Museum of Natural History. Admission to some of these places is free.

4.2.
-------------	--

The construction of Central Park began in 1857 and it took 15 years to finish. The cost was huge because the designers wanted to make a landscape which was in the English Romantic tradition. So, before the area became a park, several hundred trees were planted and enormous amounts of soil were carefully removed. The result was a natural-looking green space.

4.3.
-------------	--

Central Park is such a beautiful and atmospheric place that film directors like to use it for outdoor scenes. Plenty of films, both classics and modern blockbusters, contain scenes which were shot in the park. If you've watched family favourites like "Home Alone 2", "I Am Legend", or "The Avengers", you have definitely seen the park in the background.

4.4.
-------------	--

After a visit to Central Park, you can take a walk along Fifth Avenue, a street which is right next to the park. The world-famous Guggenheim Museum is there. If you visit it, take advantage of the opportunity to have lunch in the museum's famous "The Wright" restaurant. The food there is better than anywhere else in the city. It is always fresh and tasty. You can choose from a varied menu which includes seafood, vegetable dishes and fruit.

- A. THE COST OF A VISIT TO THE PARK
- B. A RECOMMENDED PLACE FOR EATING OUT
- C. A VARIETY OF ATTRACTIONS FOR VISITORS
- D. A FAVOURITE LOCATION FOR MOVIE MAKERS
- E. THE LONGEST WALKING PATH THROUGH THE PARK
- F. THE WORK REQUIRED TO CREATE THE PARK

THE SEARCH

The wind got stronger. Suddenly, I saw it blow my dad's favourite cap off his head and carry it down into the valley. I hurried to where Dad and our dog were standing to tell him I'd look for it later.

"When?" Dad asked.

"In the morning. It's getting dark. We won't find it now."

Dad was very sad because the cap was a present that he had got years ago from my grandma. Seeing the expression on his face, I changed my mind.

"OK. Let's get in the van and look for it together."

It was completely dark by the time I started searching the valley. Dad stayed in the van.

His window was rolled down, and he was giving me instructions I couldn't hear.

In the end I had to give up, but I told him I'd look again in the morning, when there was more light. He was disappointed and didn't try to hide this fact. I knew he would miss the cap very much.

THE MUSEUM OF LOST THINGS

The Bureau of Lost and Found Objects in Paris is a building filled with items that have been lost in the city. The Bureau was started in the 1800s and every day it still receives up to 700 items that have been found on the metro, in restaurants, museums, airports, hotels and other locations. It is an interesting fact that many expensive or unusual items have never been claimed. These include a fireman's helmet, a uniform from the time of Napoleon, a violin and even an old-fashioned street lamp. Many items are completely new and unused, including a wedding dress and matching shoes. The collection is rarely open to the public, so if you want to buy a ticket to see it, remember to do so well in advance.

“This is the number 88 bus to Parliament Hill Fields.”

The recorded message sounded in the bus as Libby carried her two backpacks on board. She began to walk toward the only free seat on the lower deck, but suddenly a teenage boy threw himself into it, so she climbed the stairs to the upper deck. It was quite empty and she easily found a seat with plenty of space around it. She put her heavy backpacks on the floor next to her.

“Oh my goodness, it’s you!”

A voice made her jump, and she turned around to see an elderly man sitting across the aisle.

“I’m sorry. I think you’ve mistaken me for someone else,” Libby said.

“Oh... oh, I’m sorry but I couldn’t help noticing that...” the man continued. “Are you an artist?”

Libby looked to where he was pointing and saw an old sketch pad in the side pocket of one of her backpacks. She hadn’t even realized it was there; that showed how long it had been since she’d used it.

“I’m afraid not. That’s from years ago. I think my drawing days are long gone. Although I wanted to go to art college, I studied medicine instead because my parents insisted. But I hated medical school and left before I could do harm to anyone.”

The man laughed and Libby smiled.

“So, what are you doing now, then, if not medicine or drawing?”

She wasn’t sure what to say. Just twenty-four hours ago she had been working for her best friend as a secretary in his company. It’d had nothing to do with her education. But now... who knew?

The bus was approaching Trafalgar Square. At its centre, Nelson’s Column rose tall above the crowds of tourists. Behind it stood the National Gallery. She looked at it with pleasure and nostalgia. She’d been there once, on a school trip. Most of her classmates had got bored quickly and ended up leaving for the cafeteria, but Libby had fallen in love with the building itself, and the paintings inside, and had walked around completely fascinated. Libby looked at the old man and saw he was also lost in thought. Suddenly he shook his head, as if waking himself from a dream. The bus pulled up at a stop.

“You know, a lady once told me you didn’t need to go to art school to learn how to draw. She said all you needed to do was to spend time at the National Gallery where you could learn from the greatest artists in the world. She used to draw on the bus, too. She said it was the perfect place to practise drawing because on a bus there are so many interesting people and things to see. I think I’ll get off here. There’s a painting I’d like to go and see,” the man said.

“Do you need some help with going down the stairs?” Libby asked.

“No, thank you. I’ll be fine.” The man looked down at her. “My name is Frank, by the way.”

“I’m Libby. It was nice to meet you, Frank.” And she meant it.

“Libby.” He smiled as he repeated her name. “Why don’t you try drawing on the bus? I have a feeling you’ll enjoy it.” And with that he turned and slowly went down the stairs.

BICYCLES WHICH GROW ON TREES

You probably haven't heard of Andy Dix, but everyone in the small Welsh town of Hay-on-Wye knows that he is a passionate cyclist. 7.1. ____ About three years ago he decided to combine his passion with his business. However, there are two things you have to remember if you want to order one of Andy's bikes. 7.4. ____ Also, the waiting time is long because his company gets many orders from all around the world.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE WORD 'HELLO'

What do you say when you pick up the phone? You say 'hello,' of course. But did you know that the word 'hello' has been used for more than 200 years? At first it just meant that you were 10.1. (SURPRISE) _____ by something, but this changed when the telephone was invented and a word to start a conversation was needed.

Two 10.2. (SCIENCE) _____ – Thomas Edison and Alexander Graham Bell – suggested two different words for that. Edison proposed that phone users should start their calls with the word 'hello', while Bell preferred the word 'ahoy'.

The first telephone book included a "How To" section which recommended using 'hello', so that is the word which became the standard. However, it was more difficult to find a good way to end a phone conversation. The first phone book recommended the phrase 'That is all', which 10.3. (LUCKY) _____ hasn't stood the test of time.

Maybe that's because people like to end their calls in different ways depending on who the conversation has been with, and what it's been about!
